School designations are first to be released under new accountability plan; 20% of schools across Tennessee earn Reward status

Friday, September 21, 2018 | 02:37pm

NASHVILLE—Education Commissioner Candice McQueen announced today the 2018 Reward and Priority schools, which are two key designations under Tennessee's school accountability system. This was the first year Tennessee implemented its new school accountability model, which was developed with educators and stakeholders across the state and which looks at multiple measures of success.

Reward status is the top distinction a school can earn in Tennessee. Reward schools are those that are improving overall student academic achievement and student growth for all students and for student groups, and they are identified annually. In 2018, 318 schools in 85 school districts – about 20 percent of schools in the state – earned Reward status.

JOHN N. ANDERSON

4 Years at TS; Class Vice President 4; Junior Red Cross 1,2; President 3; Key Club 3,4; Rifle Club 1; Basketball Scorekeeper 4; Junior Buccaneer, Club Editor; Senior Representative - Most School Spirit.

Q: Why was it important to you to establish the John N. and Dr. Judith R. Anderson Endowment for University School?

A: First, it was time to give back to the school. Any success I achieved was certainly enhanced by the education I received at the Training School (University School.) We remain in touch with US as two of our grandsons are students at the school.

Q: What is your favorite University (or Training) School memory?

A: The friendships made and kept until this day. TS was smaller then and you could get to know kids across all grade levels. The faculty & staff were friends as well while still being respected as our leaders.

Q: What advice do you have for the newest US alumni?

A: Value the opportunity you have as a US student. You will have strengths that many other students will not have.
