HIST 5020-201 - The Russian moment in history (end of the nineteenth to the end of the twentieth centuries) occurred during the transition from late tsarism to communism. Russia repeatedly gained and lost large territories throughout its history. Russian territorial expansion in tsarist times was never greater than in the late imperial period, but it expanded even further in the Soviet period. Russia went from a Great (Eurasian) Power in the late imperial period to a global superpower in the Soviet period. In the post-Soviet era, some in Russia argue that the Russia Federation must continue its role as a great Eurasian imperial state. Russia attained its moment in history through a series of adjustments to past successes and failures that students assess in this course.
