HIST 3950-904 Topic: The History of Espionage & Treason in the early Rupublic Summer 2013 Note: This is an online writing intensive course (IWRT) that looks at the history of expionage and treason in the United States between the 18th and 19th centuries. Spies contributed to the success of the War for American Independence, but the view of spies and the meaning of treason are still being debated in the 21st century. During the semester students will look at several persons who were spies and the meaning of treason are still being debated in the 21st century. During the semester students will look at several persons who were spies or suspected of spying. In addition to individuals such as Vice President Aaron Burr, who were tried for treason. Topics covered in the course include government sanctioned espionage, creative ciphers and methods of transmiting messages, and the American Revolution's first confirmed double agent. Because several persons were charged with treason in the early republic but convictions were rare, we will also look at the problems encountered by public officials who attempted to convict U.S. citizens of treason.
