ARTA 4957-051 Special Topic "Collagraph Printmaking" course description: This course will cover the Collagraph printing technique. Students will create finished editions and unique multiples utilizing this alternative method. The Collagraph is based on collage plate and utilizes layers, textures, and found materials. Students will create complex, highly experimental printed surfaces using safe, non-toxic forms of plate construction, such as collage, cut and manipulated papers, hand coloring, mixed media and natural materials. Beginning through advanced students are encouraged to participate.

Description: This course provides an introduction to data and text mining and will cover both supervised and unsupervised machine learning techniques. The main focus will be creating prediction models and selecting the correct machine-learning algorithm for the data set. Algorithms include Market Basket Analysis, Decision Trees, Latent Semantic Analysis, Singular Value Decomposition, Support Vector Machines, and others. Students will compete for the most accurate prediction model. Please contact Dr. Jay Jarman for more information. (439-6961 or jarman@etsu.edu)*

By looking at Shakespearean films as exciting, rich, and meaningful texts themselves, this class will consider cinematic Shakespeare as a contribution to the reinterpretation and appropriation of his works. We will also discuss relevant issues as they arise (race, class, gender, sexuality). The course will focus primarily on film adaptations that follow the texts closely, but it will also examine films that might incorporate Shakespeare in a more original manner. The course will be taught online, although some optional discussion sessions may take place on campus as well.

In this course, we will study the newly coined term Nature deficit disorder. This malady posits that children are spending ever-increasing time indoors and divorced from the natural world. We will explore the ways in which educators can actively combat this ever growing affliction. In addition to reading a variety of titles, students will be required to join the class on hikes to local natural areas, and they will be encouraged to explore the landscapes around their own homes.
