SOWK 4957-911 Special Topic "INDIGENOUS APPROACHES TO ENVIRONMENTAL JUSTICE" Course Description: This interprofessional education course for social work, environmental health students, and students interested in environmental justice examines approaches to collaborative environmental justice using examples of Indigenous efforts and accomplishments in environmental preservation. Through this course students explore the impact environmental justice efforts have both locally and globally as well as the effect it has on all forms of life. Environmental justice is examined from ecosystems, policy, and environmental health perspectives. Students develop and implement interprofessional collaborative action plans to promote environmental justice. Additionally, students who are on a clinically focused track such as graduate students in social work, psychology or counseling explore the use of Indigenous methods in clinical practice with communities. This course is taught online, is asynchronous, and is open to undergraduates and graduates.

The dates for this Study Abroad are May 6 - May 27. This course is taught in Japan. It is based on new communicative approaches rather than traditional methods of language education that focus purely on grammar and sentence structure. It uses the Marugoto Course books, new textbooks published by the Japan foundation. The aim of this course is to use Japanese language skills to get to know people, order in Japanese restaurants, and take part in many other Japanese related events. At the end of each session, participants will be able to perform specific, practical tasks in Japanese. The students will try to do these tasks by communicating with Japanese people in Japan as assignments in each chapter. Learning about Japanese culture and people is a very important part of this course. The students will learn about them by communicating with Japanese college students, visiting historical places and museums, and watching traditional Kabuki theater and a traditional Japanese sports, Sumo, and so forth.
