BIOL 1010-900 is an ONLINE course offered through the ETSU Biological Sciences Department and requires a permit to register. Send permit requests along with your E# and course CRN to connere@etsu.edu. Students will not be required to meet on campus or online at scheduled times. A distance learning laboratory kit is required, and it will be provided by your instructor at no extra charge. For minimum system computer requirements and additional information, please go here: https://www.etsu.edu/onlinehelp/student_help/tech_resources.php (you will need to copy/paste the link). Please be advised you will be responsible for watching/listening to lectures on D2L and completing assignments and assessments by the posted deadlines for each. You will be required to submit electronic photos of yourself performing the home-based lab exercises in order to receive full credit. Other requirements will be addressed by the instructor. The lab portion is included in this course. Please do not register for a separate BIOL 1011 co-requisite. Prerequisite: 2210, 2910, or instructor permission. This course, unlike most introductions to Python, is intended for students with a prior background in OO programming. I intend to move somewhat quickly through the rudiments of Python, starting with values and progressing through data and control structures, OO constructs, and modularization. Along the way, I'll highlight differences between Python and standard models of execution for compiled languages, noting how Python's features influence low-level design, much as choice of medium-- say, watercolors vs. oils-- influences artistic composition. The text for this flyover of Python will be a Jupyter Notebook that two former graduate students and I developed during the 2019-2020 academic year. Thereafter, I'll focus on using Python for some as-of-yet domain of interest. Expect frequent exercises, centered around the Notebook, followed by at least one significant project and presentation of your work. Course will meet on ground during the days and times noted. Completing all course elements online IS NOT possible.

Shortly after the birth of Islam, in the seventh century AD, Muslims became increasingly present among African communities across the continent. What were at first a few isolated Muslim travelers exchanging wares and knowledge, eventually would come to form large religious majorities in some areas. What were the main undercurrents of this massive process of religious conversion? Did patterns of Islamization differ between regions and from East to West Africa? Is there such a thing as an "African Islam," in other words, to what extent can one say that Islam has been "Africanized"? How did Islam influence the creation and operation of social, political, and economic institutions? Did women have equal access to these institutions? Indeed, how did Islam impinge on the status of African women across diverse cultures? What did being Muslim mean in the context of the trans-Saharan and the trans-Atlantic slave trades? How did Muslim communities deal with colonial imposition and the challenges of the post-colonial period? These are some of the general questions that we will be exploring throughout the course of this class.

The Great War, 1914-1918 examines the causes, conduct, and outcomes of the First World War by analyzing the diplomatic, economic, military, and informational aspects of the strategic and operational environment before, during, and after the conflict. The course covers the military aspects of the period preceding the war (from 1870), the war itself (1914-1918), and the immediate aftermath (to 1920). The focus of the course is on reviewing and analyzing the conduct of military operations during the period 1914-1918. Students begin with an overview of the strategic environment and the political context for the military struggle. Students then receive an orientation to relative advantages and disadvantages of contemporary military organizations, tactics, equipment, technology, rank structures, and living conditions. Students will develop analysis tools based upon the Principles of War; use the tools to analyze the conduct of selected military operations from both perspectives; and use the results of the analysis to suggest lessons and improvements that would benefit future military operations. Students will complete four written essays or operational analyses on topics of relevance to the course and to the student.

SOWK 4957 Special Topics "Child Trauma & Practice" Course Description: This course is the second course offered as part of the Trauma and Child track in the social work department. It assists students to acquire the practice skills to become culturally competent child welfare workers. The course will analyze the practices in social services that provide preventive, case management, out of home care, treatment, and rehabilitative services targeted for children, youth and families. The role of social services in the broad context of formal and informal systems that influence the life course of the child are addressed. The course emphasizes the unique life experiences of multicultural populations and their intersection with the foster care and adoption system, including consumers of different ages, races, cultures, socioeconomic states, and sexual orientations. Students will be prepared to recognize and address ethical issues social workers may face in a child welfare setting

ENROLLMENT FOR SEVIERVILLE STUDENTS- BY PERMIT ONLY SOWK 4957 Special Topics "Child Trauma & Practice" Course Description: This course is the second course offered as part of the Trauma and Child track in the social work department. It assists students to acquire the practice skills to become culturally competent child welfare workers. The course will analyze the practices in social services that provide preventive, case management, out of home care, treatment, and rehabilitative services targeted for children, youth and families. The role of social services in the broad context of formal and informal systems that influence the life course of the child are addressed. The course emphasizes the unique life experiences of multicultural populations and their intersection with the foster care and adoption system, including consumers of different ages, races, cultures, socioeconomic states, and sexual orientations. Students will be prepared to recognize and address ethical issues social workers may face in a child welfare setting
