

2014

Academic Program Review: Promises and Perils

Virginia P. Foley

East Tennessee State University, foleyv@etsu.edu

Follow this and additional works at: <https://dc.etsu.edu/etsu-works>

Part of the Higher Education Commons

Citation Information

Foley, Virginia P. 2014. Academic Program Review: Promises and Perils. Proceedings of the Joint Meeting of the Academic Business World International Conference & International Conference on Learning and Administration in Higher Education, Nashville, TN. 50.

This Conference Proceeding is brought to you for free and open access by the Faculty Works at Digital Commons @ East Tennessee State University. It has been accepted for inclusion in ETSU Faculty Works by an authorized administrator of Digital Commons @ East Tennessee State University. For more information, please contact digilib@etsu.edu.

Academic Program Review: Promises and Perils

Copyright Statement

This document was published with permission from the publisher. It was originally published in the Proceedings of the Joint Meeting of th Academic Business World International Conference and International Conference on Learning and Administration in Higher Education.

Academic Program Review: Promises and Perils

Virginia P. Foley
East Tennessee State University

ABSTRACT

The most frequent use of Academic Program Review is in response to a need for retrenchment. During a time of duress, often with a very short time line, decisions are made about criteria to use in determining what to jettison. Many times the criteria with the greatest weight is simply cost to operate the program(s) being eliminated. This paper reviews research on decision making; identifying the differences between colleges and universities who attempt this in response to budget shortfalls and those that engage in this routinely as a means of program improvement and institutional effectiveness.

This paper also discusses the experience of a university currently undergoing an academic program review with a timeline of 24 months and the commitment (and struggle) to keep the focus on quality, not cost.